

SCREENWRITER'S CHECKLIST

Do I have a focused idea about the plot of my film?

Have I done enough research on my chosen subject?

Do I have set bullet or plot points for my script to follow?

Are my characters original and memorable?

Do I know the proper format of screenplays?

Do I follow a routine when it comes to writing?

Is writing an enjoyable experience for me?

Am I willing to get knocked down but continue on?

If you clicked yes on most or all of these sentences, than you are entitled to congratulations!

That means you're right on track.

If not, well don't worry about it and just mark them off as you accomplish them.

You see that is the difference with my teachings over anyone else's, is I simply take what I have learned and then lay those easy to follow steps out for you to do in a concise manner. Thus in return that will make your screenwriting experience greater and move it along much faster.

Well now the choice is yours. You can get my help here at

Script Writing Made Easy » Script Writing Platinum Membership

Or you can follow the road of the majority of so called writers around who hope to be discovered after dropping their script off at the Wahlbergs restaurant or something else of that nature.

Either way don't give up and get writing!

Take care,

-The Unrelenting Writer
